Mid-August is not the only summer at its fullest but also the International Youth Day - a celebration of active youth who see the need for change for the better and continuous improvement, and thus also to improve their environment.

This year's motto was to engage young people in the global initiative. The organizers of the International Youth Day, operating within the framework of the UN Youth, undertook local discussions and activities that have a global impact. Can a small, regional group of young people influence high-level government decisions? Is the initiative of the individual really beneficial to all of us? You can hear about this and many other issues in the UN Youth podcast organized in celebration of all youth.
